

Yet while Monty is chewing the grass and looking after his friends, he often looks up to watch the birds fly overhead.

He wonders where they are going . . .

One morning, when Monty is doing his rounds, he notices that the gate is open. Loud honking noises overhead make him look up – there are the geese again.

Monty has never left the farm before, but his curiosity makes him walk through the gate and out of the meadow to follow the birds.

Monty has to walk fast to keep up with the geese, and after a while he gets tired and hungry.

He is happy when he sees that the birds are perched in a nearby tree. As he gets closer, he sees them pecking at large red apples.
