Whatever Lily wants

Gillian Philip

'You wouldn't eat that if you knew what was in it.' Lily tapped the label with a perfect pink fingernail.

I slapped the low-fat chocolate bar onto the counter angrily. Lily shook her braids, her skin glossy with organic good health.

It's all right for her. She can gorge on as much chocolate and full-fat food as she likes. My perfect body is under my skin somewhere, and I'll try to unearth it by any means available; even if I can't pronounce half the ingredients.

Lily and I go back a long way. It isn't her fault she's spoiled. She's always been gorgeous; she shatters the heart of anyone who falls for her, but they never hold it against her, poor fools.
