THE LAST DINNER

The President's Lodgings, Magdalen College. Oxford. 7 AM, the morning of the 25th of October.

Mrs Lattimer, the housekeeper, knocked twice at quarter past seven. Sir Edmund Hartwell, seventy-eight, President of Magdalen since 2004, did not answer. She found him in his study, slumped in the wing chair beneath the portrait of Cardinal Wolsey. The decanter of fino sherry was on the side table, the cut-glass tumbler beside it, half empty. The doctor would later confirm cyanide.

Sir Edmund had presided at high table the night before. Twelve fellows had stayed on for the senior Magdalen sherry, served from the decanter he kept in his Lodgings for important nights.

The Day Book sat open on the desk. Twenty-two years of names. Every fellow, visitor and student who had crossed his threshold for sherry and conversation. A page of new entries, in his own hand, the ink not yet dry. The names of those who had sat with him at his last dinner.

Detective Hartmann arrives at half past seven. He closes the door behind the doctor. He picks up the Day Book. He knows the killer's name is in there. He knows he will not finish it alone.

THE DAY BOOK

Hartmann places the open Day Book on the writing desk in front of you.

"Sir Edmund kept this book from the day he became President. Every fellow who came to his Lodgings for sherry. Every visiting scholar. Every student who needed his ear. Every guest at his table. Twenty-two years of names, in his own hand. Three generations of Magdalen."

He turns the first page.

"I spent the night on it. Seventeen clues, no more. All of them point to the same name. You will find them on the two pages that follow. Read them one at a time. For each clue, cross out every name that fails it. A pencil is enough. Strike through, turn the page, keep going."

He pauses.

"There is an eighteenth clue. It isn't in the pages. It is in the Day Book itself. Yours to find."

Hartmann stands.

"The Day Book is yours. Cross out the innocent."

■

Apply the clues that follow in the order you prefer. Each one eliminates part of the names in the Day Book.

If your investigation stalls, visit suspek.co.uk/oxford for another clue.

CHAPTER 1

CHRIST CHURCH

The Tom Quad, half past nine on Sunday morning. The Dean of Christ Church, Dr Anthony Marshfield, has been notified by the porter at eight. He receives Hartmann in his study above the gate.

"Edmund dined here on Thursday evening. The Henry the Eighth Society. Quarterly dinner. We hosted twenty-two scholars in the hall."

Hartmann asks if anyone seemed unusual.

"Edmund did. He was distracted. He left before the port. He said he had a chapter to finish at his Lodgings before the morning."

A chapter of what?

"He had been writing a memoir. Slowly, for years. He told me on Thursday it was nearly done. He said he expected it to be uncomfortable for some."

Marshfield does not name names. He does not know whose discomfort Edmund had anticipated.

The porter who saw Sir Edmund leave at half past nine on Thursday evening confirms he was alone, walking towards the Broad.
