THE LAST CROSS-REFERENCE

42 Bishophill Senior, York. The first Saturday of November, 6:14 PM. On the half-moon hallway table three minute-book photocopies lay clipped together beside her grey wool gloves, and Edith Rowntree-Pearce had just heard the bell.

She was sixty-nine, retired Senior Archivist of the Borthwick Industrial Records. The photocopies were 1981/Q3/14, 1981/Q3/17 and 1981/Q4/02. Beside them the cast-iron roasting iron sat on the sideboard, where her grandmother had set it down in 1924. A note on Borthwick stationery was folded in her cardigan pocket.

The doorbell had rung at 6:02 PM. She let her visitor in, and they spoke in the hallway for twelve minutes. When she turned to lead the way through, a footstep closed in behind her.

The iron came down once. She fell against the radiator and slid to the tiled floor, still warm at the temple. The hallway clock stood at 6:14 PM. From a neighbour's open window, the opening phrase of a Bach cantata carried clean on the November air.

Mrs Padgett at No. 40 found her at 7:55 AM on the Sunday. Inspector Hartmann reached the door at 9:25 AM. DS Patrick Garbutt of North Yorkshire Police was at the kerb.

THE INDUSTRIAL RECORDS

By mid-morning the Borthwick cross-reference was on Hartmann's desk at the North Yorkshire Police MCIT, Fulford Road. The November light came in high through the briefing-room windows. DS Garbutt stood at the back of the room with his fountain pen uncapped. Hartmann set the bound register flat. He did not rush.

Miss Rowntree-Pearce had built the list for thirty-six years. Minute-books. Wages ledgers. Apprenticeship registers. Every name the city's chocolate firms had set down in ink since the Victorian period.

'Forty-seven thousand first names. One of them is the killer of Miss Edith Rowntree-Pearce.'

Inspector Hartmann turned the cover back.

'I have drawn seventeen clues from the case. They narrow the name to one.'

He closed the register and slid it across the desk.

'The list is yours. Cross out the innocent.'

■

Apply the clues in any order you prefer. Each one eliminates part of the list.

If you get stuck, find more hints at suspek.co.uk/york.

CLUE N°01

CHAPTER 1

THE BISHOPHILL DOOR

Mrs Joan Padgett was at the open hallway door of No. 42 Bishophill Senior when Hartmann arrived. The morning sun lay long across the worn rug behind her. Through the doorway he could see the half-moon table, the grey gloves and the empty space where, the night before, three minute-book photocopies had been clipped together.

She was seventy, twenty-eight years next door, retired from St Clement's primary. She brought him through to the front parlour without crossing the hallway twice.

'I came round with her Sunday Times magazine. She had not collected it yesterday. The door was on the latch.'

She had let herself in at 7:55 AM. Edith had been on the tiles below the sideboard, the cast-iron iron back in its place above her head. The kettle in the kitchen was cold by then.

'Mrs Padgett.' Garbutt looked up from his notebook. 'Any callers on the Saturday?'

'A woman came up the hill from Micklegate just before six. I was at my own front window with the iron on. She had a Borthwick canvas bag, the green one. I thought nothing of it. Edith had visitors from the Institute often enough.'

Hartmann asked about the half-moon table.

'It had three pieces of paper on it when I went past at 5:30 PM. Edith had been at her cross-references all afternoon. The note on Borthwick stationery was in her cardigan pocket when I found her. I touched nothing.'

In twenty-eight years she had never known Edith Rowntree-Pearce leave the front door on the latch.
