NONBINARY+

PIONEERS OF THE NEW HUMAN RACE

The nonbinary human+

A Vision Inspired by Martinus

Indholdsfortegnelse

About the Author 6
Reading This Book 8
On the Word “God” 8
Preface 9
Introduction 11
A Human in Transformation 11
A Time Between Two Worlds 11
The Human Between Body and Soul 12
Martinus – A Human Ahead of His Time 12
A New Consciousness Emerging 15
Chapter 1 – Conceptual Framework 16
Gender, Identity, and Love – Three Layers of the Human Being 16
Brief Guide to Common Terms 16
What “Nonbinary” Means—Emotionally and in Identity 17
Chapter 2 – A World in Transformation 23
Psychological Transformation – From Roles to Authenticity 24
The Nonbinary Human as a Symbol of the Future 25
Chapter 3 – Martinus’ View on Gender and Love 28
The Human Being as a Double-Poled Entity 29
Gender and Love Today – The Mirror of Consciousness 30
The Conflict Between Past and Future 31
The Path to the True Human Being 31
Chapter 4 – The Many Expressions of Gender: The Soul’s New Language 35
Nonbinary – Humanity Between the Poles 36
Genderfluid – When Gender Is Movement 36
Agender – When Gender No Longer Matters 36
Pansexual – Love Without Boundaries 37
Demisexual – Love Through Deep Connection 37
Homosexuality and Bisexuality – Bridges Between Worlds 37
A New Human Phase 38

The Modern Understanding of Gender Identity 38
Chapter 5 – Two Languages for the Same Process 44
Epigenetics – Thoughts That Switch Genes On and Off 47
Neuroplasticity – The Mind Shapes the Brain 47
When Change Awakens Resistance 50
Fear as Defense 50
A New Understanding 52
Chapter 6 – A Shared Message: Love as the Goal of Evolution 53
When Humanity Becomes Double-Poled 53
From Sexual Love to Universal Love 54
A Glimpse of the Future 55
Science Approaches Spirit 57
Chapter 7 – The Human Being and Society of the Future 61
From Gender to Humanity 62
From Conflict to Understanding 62
The Society of the Future 62
The Nonbinary Human as Forerunner 63
Technology and Consciousness – Collaboration, Not Control 67
Chapter 8 – When Humanity Becomes Love 70
From “I” to “We” 70
Chapter 9 – When Love Takes Form 76
When Love Becomes Consciousness 76
Author’s Note 78
Between Science and Spirit 79
Love as Understanding 79
A Bridge Between Generations 79
An Ending Without End 80
Epilogue – The Stages of Humanity’s Consciousness 81

About the Author

This book was written by a human being, one who, like so many others, has lived in the tension between reason and feeling, between the earthly and the spiritual.

I have spent a lifetime working with people, with responsibility and with justice, and I have seen how life's deepest questions always circle back to the same point:

How do we meet one another with understanding when we are different?
And how do we remain true to ourselves, while the world keeps changing?

My work and life experience have taught me that people seek meaning in many ways. Some find it through religion, others in science, some in love—and some, like myself, in the meeting between the visible and the invisible.

I have always held a deep respect for both logic and the soul. That is why the spiritual science of Martinus moved me so profoundly. It unites spirit and intellect within a worldview where nothing happens by chance, and where love is the very structure of life itself.

I have met people at life's extremes—in grief and responsibility, in illness, love, and doubt, and again and again I have seen how what we believe separates us, in truth connects us.

We all long to be seen.
We long for meaning.
And we long for love.

When I began meeting nonbinary, pansexual, and other individuals who experience themselves beyond the traditional boundaries of gender, I discovered something deeply familiar in their stories. Not rebellion, but longing.

A longing to live in harmony with the inner human being, not only with the body.

I saw that what many today are struggling with is in reality, the same process Martinus described almost a century ago, only in a different language.

This book, therefore, is not a work of debate, but a bridge. A bridge between science and spirit, between past and future, between gender and love.

I hope it may be read both by those seeking to understand themselves, and by those seeking to understand others. For behind all differences lies the same yearning—the one Martinus called the path to the true human kingdom: Love that does not ask about gender, but about soul.

Reading This Book

This book may be read in several ways. As an introduction to the cosmic worldview of Martinus, as a spiritual meditation, or as a modern reflection on humanity's psychological and biological evolution.

You may read it linearly, from evolution to love, or simply open it at any page and allow a passage to speak directly to the heart.

For the purpose of this book is not to convince, but to awaken. To remind the reader of something already present within their own consciousness.

On the Word "God"

In this book, the word God is not used in a religious sense, not as a distant figure, a superior being, or a judging power in the heavens.

When we speak of God here, it refers to the light behind life, the living consciousness that permeates everything, of which we are all a part.

It is not "someone" watching over us, but the very energy we exist within and arise from. One may call it the essence of life, the intelligence of the universe, the field of love, or simply the light described by those who have had near-death experiences: An all-embracing, warm, unconditional awareness where fear cannot exist.

When Martinus used the word God, he did not mean a religion, but the wholeness, the power of which all living beings are a part, and which humanity gradually learns to feel, to understand, and ultimately to express through love.

It is this light, this consciousness, this love that is here called God. Not a person outside ourselves, but the very heart of life, the essence of what we all truly are.

Preface

This book was not written to persuade anyone, but to create understanding. It grew out of a quiet wonder at the times we live in, an age where everything flows, and where human beings are at once more free and more confused than ever before.

We live in a world where many old truths are crumbling, and where the new ones have yet to take shape. And in the midst of it all, we stand, as human beings, with hearts that still long for what they always have: Love, meaning, and belonging.

I began to write because I wanted to understand what lies behind the many new ways people describe themselves today. Words such as nonbinary, pansexual, genderfluid, and queer have entered our language, along with them, an entirely new way of speaking about identity and love.

Yet behind these new words, I recognized something ancient: A longing to be seen for what one truly is, not for what one is expected to be.

At the same time, I rediscovered Martinus. His works had always fascinated me, but suddenly I saw them in a new light. He did not write about gender identity in the modern sense, yet he described precisely the process humanity is now living through, a transformation from being guided by gender and instinct to being guided by love and consciousness.

Martinus called it the transformation of the sexes and explained that humanity in our time experiences a kind of inner division. One pole within us diminishes while the other is being born.

He said this would lead to a new kind of human being—a double-poled being—whose love is no longer bound by gender, but by life itself.

When I read that, I suddenly understood the gender changes of our time in an entirely different way. Perhaps all of this is not about gender at all. Perhaps it is about evolution.

I have not written this book as an expert, but as a human being. As one who has listened, wondered, felt, and tried to see beyond what, on the surface, may seem confusing. I wish to open a space where the spiritual seeker and the rational thinker can meet. A space where we may speak of gender, love, and consciousness without fear, without struggle, without judgment.