Marriage, Sex and Death

Social Worlds of Late Antiquity and the Early Middle Ages

The Late Antiquity experienced profound cultural and social change: the political disintegration of the Roman Empire in the West, contrasted by its continuation and transformation in the East; the arrival of 'barbarian' newcomers and the establishment of new polities; a renewed militarization and Christianization of society; as well as crucial changes in Judaism and Christianity, together with the emergence of Islam and the end of classical paganism. This series focuses on the resulting diversity within Late Antique society, emphasizing cultural connections and exchanges; questions of unity and inclusion, alienation and conflict; and the processes of syncretism and change. By drawing upon a number of disciplines and approaches, this series sheds light on the cultural and social history of Late Antiquity and the greater Mediterranean world.

Acknowledgments

My first and most sincere thanks must go to Drs Mary Harlow and Chris Callow for their guidance. I also offer my thanks to Prof. Matthew Innes, Dr. Gareth Sears, Dr Ville Vuolanto, Dr Christian Laes, Dr Lisa Alberici, Dr. Eve Davies, Dr Lena Larsson Loven, Prof. Ray Laurence and Dr Christina Possel for the guidance, input and constructive comments on various ideas, theories and papers I presented them with. Finally, I thank E.T Dailey, who was patient, supportive and endlessly helpful.

Further thanks go to all on Twitter for encouragement, laughs and terrible distractions especially Sian Hunter, Phoebe Bird, Paul Taylor, Cameron Davey and all my Difficult Aunts. Priyesh Shah, Luke McGarrity, Rhiannon Blake, everyone at the Centre for Academic Writing in Coventry, Clare Hayes-Brady, Edward Jackson, George Demetriades and Rebecca Wood, John, Helen, Molly and Sam Freeman, Liam McLeod-Eccles, Chandler Hamer, and Alexandra Elbakyan all provided invaluable support at different points in this long process. Finally, my parents and step parents gave all their love.

This book could not have existed without Conor Sally, who rejects all thanks and recognition but debated every comma on every page and supported me at every stage. I could not ask for a better friend, partner, cheerleader or taskmaster and will never be able to express the depths of my love and gratitude.
