

The posthumously published Hawkeye is a companion volume to David's 2020 publication, Where the Time Goes. Both books are collaborations with Diane Jonte-Pace, David's wife of many years. Where the Time Goes, released shortly before David's death, examines Diane and David's relationship since the early 1970s. Hawkeye looks further back, to photographs David took with the Brownie Hawkeye camera he received for his eighth birthday in 1959. The photographs in Hawkeye document, from a child's perspective, family, church, work, and school in the region that would soon become Silicon Valley.

Diane turned in recent years to more reflective and personal writing, collaborating with David in Where the Time Goes and Hawkeye. Both books, in a sense, are reflections on transience and the fragility of life through examinations of personal photographic archives. Both draw on images from the personal past to construct meaningful narratives of individual, relational and cultural change.