To Apollo, so that he may not curse me with false prophesy (better to be safe than sorry).

To all the young women, men and theys who believe they can't write poetry but dream of publishing a book. I did it and so can you. The only person holding you back is yourself.

Acknowledgement

There are a few people without whom this book would not be what it is today. Everything started with a poetry course for the 'The Art of Writing' minor. Where in the first lesson I vehemently said I can't write poetry and didn't know if this was a course for me. With the help of my teacher, Jess Morin, and my lovely study group of fellow writers I discovered I'm foolish for drawing hasty conclusions about my own poetry. I want to thank Jess for planting the seed of thought for a Greek epic in me, because without it this book would only have one poem about Persephone in it.

I also want to thank Maudy, Michelle, Isa and Mirthe for all the time and effort they put into giving me feedback on my poems. You guys are awesome! It's your turn to publish a book now.

I really want to thank my parents for supporting me and believing I could do this. Thank you for teaching me to grab every opportunity that comes along, and for being patient with me. This dream became a reality with a little bit of help from you and I couldn't be more grateful. Love you lots.
