Preface

The analogue and digital photographs in this book, taken between 2010 and 2018, show some nostalgia for the human aspect of cities.

They witness how people seek their way through life – and sometimes lose their way – looking for useful daily occupations, companionship, entertainment, or a new dream to live by.

With their human qualities, people keep transforming our cities day after day, even when these places are being dehumanized by huge buildings, radiation or noise.

The photographer in his turn transforms what he sees by making conscious and creative choices.
