This is a work of fiction. The names in the suspect register are used fictitiously, and any resemblance to real persons is coincidental.

First edition, 2026

How to Play

Below is a register of suspects and a list of clues. Every clue is a fact that is true of the killer. Read each clue and cross out every suspect it does NOT fit.

Every clue is valid on its own, but they are arranged from broad to narrow for the intended solving experience. Exactly one suspect survives them all. That suspect is the killer.

Some clues describe WHERE the killer appears in the register. The names print in register order as running text: read left to right along each line, then down the page.

Every clue is fair and literal: no tricks, no red herrings, no hidden story. Apply the clues correctly and you will always reach the same single suspect.

RULES

- Vowels are A, E, I, O and U only. Y is never a vowel.
- When a clue counts names on a register page, count every name printed on that page, including ones you have already crossed out.
- Letters are matched regardless of capitalisation.

WORKED EXAMPLE

Suppose a clue reads “the killer’s name does NOT contain the letter E.” You cross out every Helen, Pete and Irene (they contain an E) and keep names like Tom, Sam and Joan.

Names repeat in the register, and a name clue treats every copy the same, so if two suspects are both called Mary, this clue keeps both or crosses out both; never just one.

Then take the next clue and cross out again among the names that are still left. Work through every clue in turn: the one suspect never crossed out is the killer.

PROGRESS CHECKPOINTS

After clue 5: about 1,908 suspects. After clue 10: about 144 suspects. After clue 15: about 14 suspects.
