1 Acknowledgments

Thanks to the Creator, thanks to the spirits who guide me and the intelligence around this thought. Thanks to Joeri Gantois for his great contribution to shaping this booklet. Thanks to Elke Wilssens, Vigdis Peelman, Gonnée Been, Bob Hense, Mali Oelibrandt and Kathleen Zwakhoven for their contribution to the text, form and content.

Thanks to Life.

This booklet is my contribution to a world as it was meant to be. That is only possible by building it according to the original laws of life, with nature and the universe as an example. It can help you to reconnect with the invisible, universal manual we humans need in order to be able to do what we are here for: 'being a conscious creative being in the unity of heaven and earth'.

Creation is the dynamic process of life
It makes something out of,
what is to us, ... nothingness
How source
Expresses her unlimited potential

The original chaos comes to rest for a moment
in the perfect shape
Before the emptiness absorbs everything again
The only thing I can do is consciously contribute to this

2 Introduction

Everything in existence does what it is. Birds fly, fish swim, trees are trees and people...? Right, everything, except "we humans." By nature we are one with the earth and governed by the laws of life, but our ability of 'free choice' allows us to 'be' what we are... or not.

In today's world, ruled by "artificial intelligence", we have developed extraordinary technological skills, but at the same time we seem to have forgotten how to live as the people we really are. Instead, without realizing it, an increasing percentage of what we call "modern society" has itself become "artificial intelligence." By that I mean that they have largely lost connection with their body and soul and live in a mental projection of themselves. This has tragic consequences for their own quality of life, but also for that of the people and all other life forms around them. The red hazard lights are everywhere, and yet many continue to say that they are just fine. Many people feel the pressure from the collective to take personal responsibility for problems such as health, social inequality, biodiversity and climate (for the greater whole). But due to a lack of self-knowledge, awareness and presence, as well as the constant stream of misleading media coverage, there is little real contribution. The result is an increasing apathy with an underlying sense of guilt.

It's like a surgeon who was offered a diamond scalpel and became so blinded by the reflection of his toy that he (and his clients) forgot what it really means to be a surgeon. Because would that diamond scalpel really matter if you needed surgery?

Whether we like it or not, everything indicates that the world as we know it, our way of living together with each other and with other life forms, is coming to an end. Many who have become attached to this world and its preconceived course are doing everything they can to save it. But it is becoming increasingly clear that a large proportion of the leaders now in power have no idea how to deal effectively and sustainably with many of the vital issues that are now on the table. Thinking, for example, of climate change, famine, wars.... It's not five to twelve, which indicates we still have a little time. Nor is it five past twelve, where it is already too late. This is not a time related problem. It's about true responsibility. That means it's exactly twelve o'clock and we must do what we have to NOW. All these supposedly complex issues are simple at heart, but unsolvable from the outside. It is therefore not a time for desperate external change, but for a reflection on our fundamentals. A time of letting go of what we still want and reflecting on what life really wants from us.

With this work I offer my lifelong experience in the 'Alchemy of Life', in the hope that it will help you to rediscover your original place and function in the cosmic creation. This is not about a choice between technology or nature, or about a choice between myself or the other, but about the fusion of our timeless roots with the worldly form that is now appropriate. This includes the ability to consciously use any kind of tool for its purpose, in the right place, at the right time. Nothing more, nothing less.

3 Laws of Life vs. Laws of the World

Currently, a large percentage of society is in some kind of mass trance. It seems to be created by the worldly circumstances, but it is rather caused by a fundamental lack of self-knowledge. This makes people insecure and highly influenceable, leading to a life dominated by the laws of the world. They don't realize that long ago, we strayed from the original laws of life and replaced them with alternative human "world laws." These do not resonate with nature, the earth, the universe and carry a much lower intelligence. We are multidimensional beings but have created a largely lifeless 3-dimensional world of form that does not reflect who we really are. Or do you feel the same vitality, balance, peace and beauty when you walk into our cities and companies as when you are in unspoilt nature? Our collective I-thinking state traps us in the world of duality and a limited version of the 3rd dimension that we use very 2-dimensionally, or linearly. For example, we experience time linearly and we act accordingly. Especially when we want to do business in the world, we step completely into this linear state, which causes the space to disappear, which in turn creates pressure and the fun disappears. Few are aware of how much the unconscious choice for this time/space experience largely determines their perception of reality, but also their life potential. More on this later.

The result of our unconscious choices is that we are now moving at high speed towards a wall called 'self-destruction'. Because one of those laws of life is that of 'karma', where everything we do (or don't do) is mirrored to the original laws of life. In other words, 'karma' causes all that is 'real' that we cannot yet live to present itself again, until we have understood and integrated it. This process extends far beyond our own individual life and has a collective dimension in addition to an individual one. Many see 'karma' as a limitation, but it is a pure form of Divine Love.

How did we get into this situation? When a child gets a new toy, it temporarily forgets the old one. When humans, driven by natural evolution, discovered the deeper layer of their intellectual powers, they began to focus on it. This soon diminished the vitality in their bodies and their natural connection to the earth. But later it also darkened the unique soul light in human hearts. This overuse of thinking isolated from its environment became the model for the new human way of life leading to the world of today. With religion, modern science, business, politics and, now more than ever, the media as tools and sometimes as weapons.

Choosing the world over life caused people to focus on 'doing life' instead of 'being life'. A desperate attempt to avoid confronting death, instead of being truly alive in the here and now. Fighting disease, instead of cultivating health, and so on. This practice of doing the second or third things first in the natural order is present throughout the world today. From how we raise our children to how we do our jobs. We often think the education of our children is the most important thing..., but do we know 'the real person' or the soul 'in' our child? We want to give health a fitting place in the economic plan. We long for 'real contacts' and spend hours on social media. Our entire society is built on this habit of second things first.
