INTRODUCTION

Every single soul has its own train of thought

What really matter is the way we translate them into words

Love.

The most simple yet complex subject which cannot be controlled

Every breathing organism experiences the feeling of love at least once in their life

At first it is quite scary

A feeling that is hard to explain

A feeling that sets you free

Makes you feel like you are walking on clouds

But then you understand

You are in love.

The chemistry is unbreakable

Love is black

Love is white

It affects all races

And all ethnicities

Even the smallest insect experiences love

Although not in the same form

But it is still there.

However, love can also be painful

Two souls depart from each other

They find their own path again

As if they never knew each other

As if nothing happened

Yet the feeling is still there

Our lives change because of them

You could see it as a blessing or a lesson

The choice is yours

You either transfigure these sad emotions into fuel to hunt your dreams down or

You let your emotions be an anchor to your leg

Your heart wants what is good for you

While your mind seeks to protect

It is a battle some people fight

Do I want to be loved?

Am I ready to give love?

And receive it?

Especially that last one

Receiving love is sometimes challenging

You were once a stranger with that person

Then love flourished

And you have become inseparable

It had become a habit not to accept love

But one day

You will realize

That you cannot escape the motion of your heart when it sees someone you really like

Love is something you encounter outside,

When you walk down the street,

Or at your home, in school, in work,...

It is everywhere

You can find it in words, in gifts, recognize it in acts of services and so on

But the most notable of them all is

When it is found in those silent moments

When you are alone
