

crime boss? Slade wants it all back. All of Monacain belonged to Valentino, and Slade plans to build his empire back to it's former glory. Grant and Luis started out as a bunch of go-getters. Simple errand boys. Since then Grant worked himself up to underboss, even after Valentino's death. Slade knew Grant would be the best choice to stand by his side. As for Luis, he's been Valentino's advisor for years and he continues to be that for Slade. Although Slade prefers to call him his "consigliere" Luis isn't really about those fancy terms. He is smart, logical, but formal isn't really his forté.

Grant's file wasn't the only one Luis needed. The dirty cop had to bring him three more files. These files hold information about Jaime Dharmann, Daryl Valeska and Carmine Peletier. These names are important, and very familiar to Slade. They had to be removed too, just not in the same way as Grant. This could be proven difficult since all three of them are locked up at Alma Perdida Prison. The worst of the worst. But that is also why they need to disappear. At some point in time, each one of them was caught and send to prison. This life will only get you so far for so long as it seems.

But here is the important thing: One of them talked. They snitched on Slade, most likely in order to get a lower sentence. They should have known what happens when you betray the family. Assumingly, one of them gave an anonymous tip to the police about all of the dirty businesses Slade has left in the city. Slade found out due to two police officers who came by his house with a search warrant. And he was not too happy with that. Slade did not give them the chance to find any dirt on him...

After burning Grant's file and putting the others in his pocket, Luis pays the cop and walks out of the alley they met in. He looks back and watches how the fire incinerates the file. Since it has started to rain, Luis runs to his car while he takes out his phone. He is calling Grant to tell him his file is gone. Luis also has some news for him. "Oh Grant I almost forgot to mention, Slade has called in an emergency meeting at Salvatore Mansion. Can you be there in an hour?" Grant is a bit overwhelmed, because an emergency meeting isn't exactly a daily procedure. "In an hour? Damn, this better be good! Alright, just let me take a shower and I'll be on my way."

SPARROWBEAK STREET 12, GRANT'S APARTMENT... 21:02 PM

Grant hangs up the phone and puts it on his coffee table. He now has fifty eight minutes to shower, dress up and drive twenty minutes to Slade's mansion. Easy enough, but something stops him when he walks towards the shower. He starts looking in the mirror and notices his beard has become a little too long. So has his hair. He always had a mid-fade with medium long brown hair on top, with a bit of curls here and there. Which faded nicely into his short, but well groomed beard. He takes his razor and his shaver and starts shaving. Luckily, he has done this before.

within ten minutes he looks clean and well groomed again. Afterwards he hops in the shower and comes out after about five minutes. He walks to his closet and takes out a pair of black jeans, a black shirt and his brown leather jacket. He puts them on and then looks for his black leather boots. He walks back into the living room and sees his phone lighting up. It's a missed call from Luis. "Hmm, no use calling back now. He'll tell me what's up when I get to him." Grant thinks while he spots his boots next to the front door. He puts them on and walks out of his apartment.

Grant walks out of his apartment building and gets into his car. A 1958 wine red Chevrolet Cadillac. His most precious possession. It was a gift from Valentino when Grant became his underboss. A token of gratitude is what he called it. At that moment Grant realized that Valentino did appreciate him, even though he was never truly able to show it in other ways than with throwing his money around.