

Stars in Daylight

Stars in daylight, hidden from the sky,
quietly burning where no one can spy.
Whispers of pain, veiled in the light,
a battle within that stays out of sight.

Like shadows that flicker, they fade in the glow,
a quiet storm no one will ever know.
Behind the mask, I wear a disguise,
hiding the struggles that no one can seize.

Yet in the silence, a spark still remains,
a flicker of hope through the lingering strains.
Stars in daylight, unseen but alive,
a reminder that even in shadows, I strive.

Stolen

A shadow falls where light once played,
a voice that should have comforted,
swayed.

Innocence was shattered, torn,
a heart left bruised, a soul reborn.

The echoes linger, soft, yet loud,
a silent scream beneath the cloud.
Childhood stolen, in its place,
a lingering fear I can't erase.